.  $T^{HE}$  death of F. G. FOWLER made it possible for the publishers to express their appreciation of the valuable share he contributed to the now well-known books of which he was part-author, and in especial of his skilful planning of the present work, which has been considered a triumph of condensation. The great Oxford Dictionary with its Supplement (1933) is the ultimate source of most of the information contained in this modest compendium; which offers to general acceptance ascertained results of more than half a century of research. It is thus possible to claim for the little book unique authority among books of its size and price.

Since the publication of the Pocket Dictionary the publishers have to deplore the loss of H. W. FOWLER, a lexicographer of rare genius. They have been fortunate in securing, for this edition, the services of his friend and collaborator, H. G. Le Mesurier.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION

The publication of the Supplement to the Oxford English Dictionary in November 1933 makes important additions to the material which it is the aim of this book, as a dictionary of the living language, to present. This new edition is distinguished partly by changes in the text, but chiefly by supplementary articles in extensive Addenda, the scope of which is explained on p. 981. Mr. H. W. Fowler entrusted me with the preparation of this edition in February 1933, and until his death on the 26th December of that year I had the privilege of his guidance.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION

This book is nominally an abridgement of the Concise Oxford Dictionary, but has in fact cost its compilers more labour, partly because the larger book was found not to be easily squeezable, and partly owing to changes in method unconnected with mere reduction of quantity. The one merit, however, that they feel entitled to claim for the C.O.D. has been preserved to the best of their power in the abridgement-that is, they have kept to the principle that a dictionary is a book of diction, concerned primarily with words or phrases as such, and not, except so far as is needed to ensure their right treatment in speech. with the things those words and phrases stand for. This principle, while it absolves the dictionary-maker from cumbering his pages with cyclopaedic information, demands on the other hand that he should devote much more space than that so saved to the task of making clear the idiomatic usage of words. The bad dictionary, on a word that has half a dozen distinct meanings, parades by way of definition half a dozen synonyms, each of them probably possessed of several senses besides the one desired, and fails to add the qualifications and illustrations that would show the presumably ignorant reader how far each synonym is coextensive with his word, and what is the context to which one or other is the more appropriate. To avoid this vice has been the chief aim of the C.O.D. and of this abridgement alike; but the smaller the scale of the book, the more difficult becomes the task.

Among the changes of method referred to shows; three may be indicated.

- 1. A pronunciation system has been devised by which, with little expenditure of space, it is made clear how the compilers recommend that every word should be pronounced; the C.O.D. assumption that pronunciation might be dispensed with for most words has been abandoned. An appendix to the dictionary contains the partly naturalized or other words in which non-English sounds are required.
- 2. Alphabetical arrangement of phrases within all long articles has been carried as far as possible; it was realized that such articles in the C.O.D. were fitter to be read through as wholes by interested students (not the treatment usually accorded to a dictionary) than to be referred to by persons whose chief object is to find a particular phrase without loss of time.
- 3. Etymologies have been cut down to little more than bare statements of ultimate origin; the function of etymology in a small dictionary is taken to be the merely negative one of saving the reader from imagining a connexion between words that are in fact independent (between, e. g., recover and cover, sola topi and solar heat); that mistake may vitiate his conception of a word's meanings and must therefore be guarded against; to attach any value beyond this to the meagre information alone possible in a small dictionary (if it is not to encrosed disproportionately on the space needed for less pretentious but more essential matter) is a delusion. The brevity of the etymologies, then, with the consequent abstention from the titbits of desultory information usual in this aphere, is deliberate. It is hoped, on the other hand, that the derivations given are reliable; those of words contained in the considerable portion of the O.E.D. that has appeared between the publication of the

PREFACE

C.O.D. and the present time (roughly, letters S, T, and V) have been revised into agreement with the O.E.D. conclusions; the etymologies for which O.E.D. authority is still lacking are those of words beginning with U, W, X, Y, or Z.

A minor improvement is the inclusion of a large number of words and senses not in the original C.O.D.: some of these have been incorporated from the addenda list of 1914; and active service in France has brought the compilers acquainted with many war words deserving of record. Another minor point is an experiment in collecting words that form a series and letting the reader know where to find them; he may fairly expect to be told not only the meaning of an ox, an icosahedron, a quintet, a tercentenary, a genus, a major-general, demy paper, an obelus, or ruby type, but also what are the words for the ox of various ages and sexes, or for the other regular solids, army officers, marks of reference, and so forth, besides the one before him; an effort has been made to provide for this want by giving lists to which each word of such series contains a reference.

Directions follow for interpreting the pronunciation and the etymology attached to each word, after which a note on suffixes, one on inflexion, and a list of special abbreviations, will conclude this preface.

POSTSCRIPT

[Into this joint preface, written in 1917 before my brother's death, I must insert in 1924 an inadequate word of thanks to the many benefactors who have been public-spirited enough not to keep to themselves their discoveries in the C.O.D. of omissions, inaccuracies, and faults of method; with their help the present book becomes something more than a two-man compilation. To the Addenda printed at the end of the 1914 impression of the C.O.D. was prefixed a list of such contributors, which, as their material has now been further drawn upon, is here reproduced :- the Rev. M. N. Walde: Dr F. H. P. van Wely; F. F. Urquhart, Esq., Fellow of Balliol; Sir Arthur Church, K.C.V.O.; W. H. Thompson, Esq.; the Rev. G. Goodenough; and L. J. Berlin, Esq.

Others whose assistance must not pass unnoticed are (excluding those who have written, however valuably, on single points only):—the Very Rev. the Chief Rabbi (Dr J. H. Hertz); the Rev. J. Clare Hudson; the Rev. F. E. Hutchinson; Major C. V. N. Lyne; C. O. Ovington, Esq.; Bernard H.

Tower, Esq., formerly Head Master of Lancing; J. Beach Whitmore, Esq.; and the late C. N. Williamson, Esq.

Dr P. van Welv has added since the war to his earlier contributions; and very special thanks are due to Major Byron F. Caws, A.M.I.C.E., who has in the last two years read and re-read the C.O.D. and sent a series of commentaries upon it, covering matters so diverse as architecture, nautical terms. and modern slang, from which I hope to have drawn what profit our narrow limits of space allowed. Mr D. C. Macgregor, Fellow of Balliol, has been ' good enough to read our proofs, and has called attention to many gaps that needed filling. Finally, the great Oxford Dictionary has displayed a grandfatherly interest in this its descendant, Mr C. T. Onions in particular having kept an eye upon the proofs, and the Clarendon Press in the person of Mr R. W. Chapman, Secretary, has given every possible help at all stages.

PRONUNCIATION.

N.B.—The key at the foot of the dictionary pages sumi rizes these directions.

Phonetic respelling is placed in round brackets immediately after such words as require it, and the symbols in the PHONETIC SCHEME are primarily intended for this purpose. But respelling is often saved by employing the same symbols in the black type of the actual word; banish, for instance, has no respelling, and dispose has only (-z).

Vowel symbols given in the Scheme with -, -, or -, are also used without these marks to denote a vague indeterminate sound, which is almost identical for all vowels and (except in studied elocution) has no clear relation to the corresponding vowel marked - &c. (e.g., the a in about is like the o in reason, proceed, and is not like a or a). When so used in brackets, the indeterminates are printed in italies, thus: ago (ago), proceed (prosed), particular (partikular). Used in the actual word, they are recognized by the absence of the marks -, ", &c.; thus in sacrament, common. beggarly, all the unmarked vowels (a, e; o; ar) are indeterminate. This does not apply to the last six symbols in the Scheme, which never have marks over them and are always distinct.

Indeterminate endings in -n, -m, -l or -lc, when they require respelling, are also represented thus: poison (-zn). fusion (-zhn). tension (-shn), ocean (-shn), listen (-sn), bosom (boozm), hustle (-sl), official (-shl), weasel (-zl), the vowel sound being that similarly indicated by the actual spelling of spasm, prism, &c.

PHONETIC SCHEME.

Consonants: b; ch (chin); d; dh (dhe=the); g (go); h; j; k; l; m; n; ng (sing); ngg (finger); p; r; s (sip); sh (ship); t; th (thin); v; w; y; z; zh (vizhn=vision).

Vowels: ā ē ī ō ū oo (mate mete mite mote mute moot)

ă ĕ I ŏ ŭ oo (rack reck rick rock ruck rook) ar er ir or ur (mare mere mire more mure)

ar er or (part pert port) ah aw oi oor ow owr (bah bawl boil boor brow bower) Vowels marked " may be pronounced either way, e.g. patron (pa- or pa-). In all vowel symbols with r (ar, ar, &c.), the r, besides influencing the vowel sound, has its consonantal value when followed by a vowel in the next syllable of the word or in the following word (in fearing but not in fearful, in far away but not in far gone).

ACCENT.

The main accent is shown by the mark ', usually placed at the end of the stressed syllable; but, division into syllables being arbiteary in English, positions for the accent that would disquise the prominciation are avoided; thus starry but carry, wooll'en attecol'ly, loc'al but velo'city, ov'er but co'ver (ku-), arch'but are hetype (-kl-), muddy but muddle. The placing of two accents on a word means either (a) that the two marked syllables are equally stressed, as in cord'aroy', o'tiose', or (b) that among good speakers the one accentuation has as many adherents as the other (so bell'icose', viv'isec'tion), or (c) that the stress varies according to position in the sentence as explained in the dictionary article -ed. In the thousands of compounds given under their first elements among the alphabetically arranged combinations, accent is thus shown: if there is no hyphen separating the parts, the accent is always given (back'bone, backstairs'); if there is a hyphen, the regular usage is for the first of the compounded words to be stressed, and no accent is then given (so oak-apple); if the stress falls, contrary to this rule, on the second component, it is marked (dead-beat'); if the stress is variable, each part has an accent (well'-inten'tioned).

PRONUNCIATION WITHOUT RESPELLING.

All the further information necessary for the pronunciation of any word or part of a word that is not respelt is contained in the following six paragraphs; the assumptions made in these hold unless the contrary is shown in brackets.

1. Any letter or combination in the Phonetic Scheme has the value there shown; e.g., aw as in awl, not as in awake (awak'); and ginger, linger, would be required to rhyme with singer unless ginger were followed by (.j.), and linger by (.ngg.).

2. The following additional symbols are used in the black type:

\dot{\mathbf{e}} = \mathbf{I} (nāk/ėd, rėlý', cŏll'ėge, priv'ėt)

\mathbf{I}P, \mathbf{u}P, = \mathbf{e}P (b\mathbf{I}Pth, b\mathbf{u}Pn)

\mathbf{y}P, \mathbf{y}P, = \mathbf{I}P, I (\mathbf{I}Imp\mathbf{y}P, sŭnn'\mathbf{y}P)

- 3. Final e unmarked is not indeterminate, but mute (sane, in duc'tive; cf. re'cipe, dilettan'te).
- 4. A doubled consonant is pronounced as single (sill'y, mann' ish, butt'er), not as in cool'ly (-l-li) or thin'ness (-n-n-).
  - The following combinations and letters have the values shown Vowels.

ETYMOLOGY.

The source of each word (or group of words contained in one article) is shown in square brackets at the end of the article; a pair of empty brackets in this position means that the source is unknown or disputable; entire absence of square brackets directs the reader to the last article that has had them, and [foll.] similarly directs him to the following article.

The name of a language or the abbreviation used for it, as Malay, Du. for Dutch, Gk for Greek, F for French is often the whole contents of these brackets, and means that that is the language to which the word or its elements can be traced with some certainty, and beyond which its history is unknown. It does not imply that the word has come direct from that language into English; e.g., a word that has passed from Greek into Latin, from Latin into French, and from French into English, is described as [Gk].

To this statement of the language of origin is often added either (1, printed in italics) the actual form of the word or its chief element in that language; (2, printed in roman type) its literal meaning in that language, or a brief indication of the sense-connexion; (3, printed in small capitals) a kindred word in English, especially when the origin is Teutonic; or (1) the qualification wd (= word), as [F wd], [It wd]; this last form is used when a word, even if partly naturalized, is still recognizable as foreign by its spelling or pronunciation; it is to be taken as an intimation that the language mentioned is not necessarily that of the word's ultimate origin, but not as a guarantee that the foreign spelling has been exactly preserved in English (sommissionaire, F nn.).

When the contents of the etymological brackets neither begin with mor consist of the name of a language, the language of origin is that of the word or words printed either in italics or in small capitals; italits are used when no more is needed than that the reader should know that his word is formed from the italicized word or is another form of it; small capitals imply that he will find the etymology in the small brackets attached to the word so printed; this serves the two purposes of saving repetition and drawing his attention to the fact that the words are related. For compound words whose first element is a prefix treated in an article (ex., per. &c.), the removal of the leaves a complete English word (ex/tradition), reference is made only to the prefix (ex.) or to the main element (tradition), the reader being left to consult the other word if he chooses.

Of the words marked [E], i.c. English, the great majority are known to have been in use (though seldom in precisely the same form) from the Old-English or Anglo-Saxon period, and to correspond to similar words in other Teutonic languages; but the same description is applied to words whose history cannot be traced so far back if they have been established for some centuries and there is no reason except the want of evidence to doubt their being native. The form [E, = so-and-so] is used when the word's original meaning was different from its modern one (Lent), and again when it was in Old English a compound (lady). It should be observed in general that the language names (F, L, &c.) are given in this book (with one exception) the widest possible sense; no distinction is made between old and modern French, or classical and medieval Latin. F and L including all periods; the one exception is N. which stands only for Old Norse, the language of Norway and its colonies to the 14th century.

The forms [person], [place], [imit.], [native].

[person], [place], mean that the word or its chief element was originally the name (which is given if necessary) of a person or place. [imit.] means that the word was made in imitation of the sound associated with the thing it serves to name, or that it is held to be suggestive of it by its own sound. [native] means that the word is the received spelling of the name by which the thing is known among the people or in the place referred to in the definition.

[Teut.], [Scand.], [Celt.], [Rom.].

These and other words standing not for single languages, but for families of languages, are used only when it is certain that a word has come originally from one of the branches of such a family, but impossible to choose with certainty among them.

A reference to a passage in the Bible or a well-known author [Rev. iii] for Lacdicean) is given instead of an etymology when the connexion between sense and origin is unintelligible without it.

No etymologies have been offered as uncertain or conjectural or probable; plausible guesses at the origin of words, if they are seriously open to doubt, have not been recorded; and, if there is very little doubt of their truth, are presented as certainties.

NOTE ON SUFFIXES.

Short articles on the suffixes of which a list is given below are inserted in their alphabetical places, not by way of etymological instruction, but to save the repetition involved in defining words that do not need it. A small number of these suffixes stand apart from the rest as being attachable with absolute freedom to any

NOTE ON SUFFIXES

English word fulfilling certain conditions, without regard to whether it is known ever to have had the suffix attached to it before or not. These are -ly, -ness, -er of the agent, -er and -est of comparative and superlative, -able. -ish, -less, and -like. -ly may be added to any adjective (subject to the reservation that it is usually avoided when the adjective itself ends in -ly, giving forms like holily): -ness to any adjective (even when there is a more familiar noun of another form: humility does not preclude humbleness); agent -ar to any ordinary verb, though many verbs prefer -or (but abetter is not wrong because abettor is right); -er and -est to any mongsyllabic adjective admitting of degrees that is not stated to have irregular comparison; -able to any transitive verb (though it is avoided when the verb ends in -ble, -cle, -ple, &c., and often exists only as a possibility beside an established form in -ible-defendable beside defensible); -ish to any adjective or noun; -less (without) and -like to any noun. The words in -ly, -ness, -er (agent), -er and -est, -able, ish, ·less, and ·like, are therefore not recorded in the dictionary except for special reasons; e.g., when a question of spelling arises (as in debatable, openness, generally, notably, palish), or when the sense is abnormal (as in hardly); on the other hand, the reader is always informed when a verb has (or would naturally have) an agent-noun in -or rather than -er, when an adjective of more than one syllable uses -er or -est as well as more and most, and when a verb has an adjective in -ible preferred to that in -able. About all these nine suffixes, however, it is to be assumed that the forms ending with them may be made from all appropriate words even when they are not recorded, and such recording is not done except for special reasons.

With all the other suffixes in the list below the case is different; words ending with them are recorded if they are in current use, and if they are not recorded are to be taken as non-existent or at any rate not current; but, unless there is some modification of sense requiring notice, they are merely recorded, and not defined, and the reader is left to ascertain their meaning by consulting the suffix article; thus distraction, department, declination, all have senses not interable from the meanings of the verbs and the suffixes involved, and are therefore defined; but distortion, debouchment, and decapitation, can be recorded without definition.

The list of suffixes explained in their dictionary places is:

-able, -ac, -aceous, -acy, &l, -an, -ar, -ary, -ate, -ation, -bility, -cle,
-cracy, -crat, -cratic(all), -cule, -dom, -ed, -ee, -en, -er (agent), -er and
-est, -ery, -ess, faction, -ferous, -flc, -flcation, -fold, -form, -ful, -fy,
-graph, -graphy, -hood, -ible, -ic, -ician, -ics, -ine, -ion, -ish, -ish,
-ist, -ice, -ise, -kin, -less, -let, -like, -ling, -logy, -ly, -mania(c),
-mania, -meter, -metry, -mo, -nce, -ncy, -ness, -nj, -oid, -or, -ory, -ose,
-crus, -phil, -phobe, -phobia, -proof, -ry, -ship, -teen, -th, -tude, -ty,
--wall --ware, -ward(s), -ways, -wise, -y.

INFLEXION.

The normal inflected forms of words are not set out in the text except for special reasons. In the following rules of formation, the term thants' stands for words ending in -s, -x, -z, -sh, or soft -ch, -x 's for all that end in -o, '-e wds' for all that end in mute -e, and '-y wds' for all that end in -y not preceded by a vowel (e.g., deny, puppy, but not pray, donkey).

- 1. Plural of nouns. Sibilants add -cs (churches); -y wds change -y to -ies (ponies); -o wds' plural is always stated thus, potato n. (pl. -ocs), photo n. (pl. -ocs); other nouns add -s (cups).
- 2. Possessive of nouns. Singular nouns take apostrophe,s (man's, James's); plurals, if they do not end in s, form the possessive by the same rule (mcn's, geese's), but, if they end in s, take an apostrophe only (soldiers').
- 3. Comparative and superlative of adjectives and adverbs. In monosyllables -er, -est, are added (bolder), -e wds dropping the e (purest); if other words use -er and -est, or if the final consonant is doubled, it is stated in the dictionary, thus: serene a. (-cr, -est), grim a. (-mm-).
- 4. Third person singular present of verbs. Sibilants and -o wds add -es (wishes, goes); -y wds change -y to -ies (flies); other verbs add -s (dips).
- 5. Past and p.p. of verbs. -e wds add -d (divided); -y wds change -y to -ied (buried); other verbs add -ed (vetoed, hunted); if the final consonant is doubled, it is stated in the dictionary, thus: elip v.t. (-pp-), level v.t. (-U-).
- 6. Participle of verbs. All verbs add ing (playing), -e wds dropping the e (coming); doubling of the final consonant is stated as in 5.
- 7. Archaic 2nd and 3rd sing. of verbs. The forms in -(e)st and -(e)th, being archaic, need only be mentioned, without rules; -(e)st is 2nd sing. present and past, -(e)th is 3rd sing. present; examples are playest, dost, hear'st, madest, wouldst, saith, goeth.

ABBREVIATIONS.

In any article, when the word treated in it is to be quoted or mentioned, its initial letter followed by a full stop is used instead of the whole word; this stands only for the exact form that heads the article; e.g., in the article court, c. stands for court (noun or verb), but neither for any inflected part of the verb or noun (as courted, courting, courts), nor for any of the derivatives (courteous, courtesy, courtesan, courtier, courtly, courtship) included in the same article; but the plural of a noun is quoted by the initial doubled (here cc.), and any compound that there is occasion to quote (as here court-martial) may be represented by the two initials hyphened (c.-m.).

ABBREVIATIONS

A list of particular abbreviations used in the text follows. Notes on the asterisked items are given below the list. The addition of &c. to the completion of an abbreviation means that it may be used not only for the exact form given, but for connected words or phrases; e.g., chem./istry &c. means chemistry, chemical, chemically, in chemistry; adj./ective &c. means adjective, adjectival, adjectivally; assim./ilation &c. means assimilated as well as assimilation.

Abbreviations printed in the list in small roman type usually appear so in the text, but may on occasion be in italical and in certain positions they regularly begin with a capital lette abs.: a verb used abs. is a transitive verb with he object expressed, as in 'If looks could kill'; an adjective used abs. is without a noun to agree with, as in 'the rich', 'in vain'.

attrib. and pred.: an adjective is used attributively when it is attached in the ordinary way to a following noun, as in 'a good man', 'good men'; predicatively, when it serves as complement to a copulative or factitive verb ('The man is good'; 'I call him good'), or is placed after its noun so as virtually to make a statement additional to that made in the sentence ('uttered curses not loud but deep'); most adjectives can be used either way, a few can only be attributive (as our, my, stray, bounden), and many can only be predicative (ours, alone, alight, desirous, devoid).

Celt.: the Celtic family of languages includes Gaelic (Irish, Scottish, and Manx), Welsh, Cornish, Breton.

esp.: a particular use of (esp.) is important; when a derivative has various senses, of which some can be deduced from that of the main word, but others not, (esp.) is prefixed to remind the reader that the special senses given do not preclude the ordinary ones.

Hind.: Hindustani is Hindi (the vernacular language of Northern India) with an admixture of Arabic and Persian words introduced by Mohammedan conquerors.

hist.: this qualification is applied to words or senses that are not now current, but are necessary to the understanding of what is written about the past.

N: Old Norse was the language of Norway and its colonies to the 14th century. ullet pop.: senses thus qualified are to be understood as based on widespread misapprehension of the word's proper meaning.

pred., pred. a.: see attrib. above.

Rom.: the Romance or Romanic languages are those developed out of Latin-Italian, French, Spanish, Portuguese, Provençal, &c.

Scand.: the Scandinavian languages include Icelandic, Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish.

Freut.: the Teutonic family of languages includes Gothic, Scandinavian, Frisian, English, Dutch (Flemish), and German.

vals: the qualification implies that the use of the word or sense texcept on occasions justifying departure from custom) is due either to want of education or to want of manners.
